THE STRONGEST AND BEST!

THOS. PRICE, Chemist, pronounces the GIANT BAKING POWDER the best stronger than any sold on the Pacific Coast.
The amount of available gas is determined by the amount of available gas it contains for baking purposes, and the freedom of the article from any taste or odor is the best test. GIANT BAKING POWDER is absolutely pure, and contains more gas than any brand of Baking Powder in use on the market. It is equal to four cans of any other brand. Study economy and use none other.
Your grocer will furnish you with a sample can now. Try it.

already donned a beautiful emerald garb, and the grain fields never looked more thrifty at this season of the year. The splendid rains of the past two months have allayed all the fears of a disastrous season, and the countenances of the farmers are as serene as a summer's morn. Now that the winter months have passed, and the beauties of spring are opened, it is but natural that a thought be given to one's external appearance; the rusty garments that have been worn through the long winter are in a threadbare state which would suggest new raiment, and to act properly and intelligently upon that suggestion it is necessary to visit the great clothing house of Jones & Co., Nos. 712-714 Market street, San Francisco, and purchase a stylish spring outfit.

Housekeepers are requested to call at T. J. McNamara's tin store on Main street, and examine those fine Elmwood and Glenwood ranges before purchasing elsewhere.

Hermin Schaberg, a young man well-known as Deputy Assessor for a number of years, but now employed as book-keeper for Hanson & Co., was married on the evening of the 13th inst. to Miss Hannah Schmoll, daughter of John Schmoll of Belmont. Only the intimate friends of the bride and groom were present at the ceremony, which took place at the residence of the bride's parents. The happy couple are now located in Redwood, where they intend to reside. The residence of the newly-married couple was visited on Monday evening by a serenade party, comprising several local musicians, who charmed the music-loving community with several choice selections. They were invited in by Mr. Schaberg and hospitably entertained, at the same time exhibiting a far greater adaptability to deal with the liquid "horns" than dispensed in manipulating the brass ones outside. Mr. Schaberg took the matter philosophically and good naturally, and the boys left, wishing the bride and groom many years of prosperity and happiness.

"Have you put in anything about casting a deep gloom over the community?" asked the police reporter. "If you haven't, there's just the place for it?"

"I've told all about who and what he was," replied the law reporter. And then I say: "Our loss is his eternal gain, and let us hope that while he rests in the peaceful usurpation of such gain—And there I stop."

"Is that necessary?" inquired the law reporter, doubtfully.

"I never saw one without it," replied the police reporter. "I don't think his friends will be satisfied if it is left out."

"Suppose I make it read: 'Our loss is his eternal gain, and let us hope that though he has cast a deep gloom over the community, he rests in the peaceful usurpation of such gain—'"

"Can't you ring in Rose Conkling's speech on Oliver P. Morton?" asked the police reporter, as the law reporter looked up inquisitively. "That was the speech on Oliver P. Morton?"

"He needs no epitaph but his name." Try and see how it will look."

"I guess that's a pretty good idea!" assented the law reporter, filling it in.

"Can't you think of something about his goodness? He was up in charitable matters, and the folks always like to hear it alluded to."

"I saw a rather neat thing once," said the police reporter. "It is said of a man that he would always be remembered as possessing the highest attribute of the Savior, for he loved his fellow men. How's that strike you?"

"Couldn't he be better?" exclaimed the law reporter, putting it down.

"Now I'll ring in send-off for the man who gave me the facts, and we've got something to be proud of."

"How does it read?" asked the police reporter, as the law reporter shoved his pencil behind his ear, after a few moments of hard work.

"First rate! Tip top!" smiled the law reporter. "Just listen to this:

"Our loss is his eternal gain, and let us hope that though he has cast a deep gloom over the community, he rests in the peaceful usurpation of such gain."

He needs no epitaph but his name, and he will be remembered as possessing the highest attributes of the Savior, for he loved his fellow men, and was the father-in-law of ex-Police Justice Jim Snell, now of Colorado!"

"I regard it as a touch of nature," conceded the police reporter, as the law reported led the way to the billiard rooms. "We couldn't use the 'dull thud,' because he didn't go out that way; but, as it is, I look upon it as a gem."

And the law reporter smiled pleasantly, and with the air of a man who could go outside the line of his duties, and still shine.

Menlo Park's Safety Again Threatened by the Fire Fiend.

Several weeks ago Edward Gleason departed for Fresno city, and on the 18th of February was united in marriage to Miss Orle Baker. After spending their honeymoon in San Francisco and other places of note, Mrs. Gleason returned to her duties as teacher in Mono county to complete the term. Ed. returned here on the 14th inst, and received the hearty congratulations of his many friends. His wife is well-known in this section, having had charge of the Tunis District school for several terms, a few years ago.

On the evening of March 13th rain fell which continued up to three A. M. At 11 o'clock March 14th, rain came down in torrents, after which it became milder and continued up to 9 p. m. The rain completed the filling of the soil, and in consequence a large number of gophers on the flat land met their death. The squirrels sought the hills and so escaped, but the carbon bi-sulphide brings them. The late rain has somewhat retarded the work of the farmers, but as barley is to be sown there is plenty of time up to the middle of April. Grain and grass is growing well, and the prospects thus far for a good season are excellent.

Early March 14th the swell of the ocean was very heavy, the waves breaking over the wharf at Amesport Landing with great fury. Comodore Fleming and his five men worked very hard, narrowly escaping drowning them. After a severe struggle the donkey engine and the pile driver were brought to the centre of the wharf, and not an hour after sixty feet of the wharf went with a crash into the angry waves, including the part on which the engine stood. It is the intention of the Commodores to have the wharf extended about 120 feet, which will greatly assist the steamers in loading.

CLOSING EXERCISES.

The public schools of Redwood City closed Friday of last week, for a vacation of a fortnight. In the afternoon of that day the customary closing exercises were given. The eight classes of the schools united and were all represented in the singing and recitations.

Notwithstanding the rainstorms that continued the whole afternoon, the large hall, formed by removing the folding doors between the rooms was crowded with the parents and friends of the pupils.

A PATRIOTIC DOG.

The Animal of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiment.

The strong attachment of the faithful dog for its master has always seemed to me to involve one of nature's secrets difficult to explain or understand. Of the many cases that have come under my notice, the most curious and remarkable is that of a dog which for four long years in the war of the Union followed the fortunes of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiment. It was brought into the camp of the Eleventh while the regiment was near Chester, Penn, in May, 1861. It was a chubby little pup then, playful and pretty, and immediately became a great pet with the men. They gave it the not particularly euphonious name of Sally, but its cognomen had one merit, at least—it correctly indicated its gender—and dog names do not always do even that. Sally at once joined heartily in all the frolics of the soldiers, and her temporal well-being was the constant care of a thousand men, as brave and true as any who ever went forth to battle at their country's call.

In the early period of the war visitors to our camp were plenty, but Sally was always very discourteous to outsiders, appearing to have a "holier than thou" for civilians, whether ladies, gentlemen or strange darkness and when such entered the camp she would immediately seek the protection of the "boys in blue." Many a time at dress parade did I go over to the camp of the Eleventh to see the important part that Sally always took in that imposing pageant. Then, with the long line at "parading rest," the drum corps slowly marching down the front, the Colonel with folded arms calmly looking into the faces of the men, and Sally lying still at the feet of the color-bearer, as if she loved to be in the shadow of the flag, the scene was an impressive one. She seemed to understand for what purpose we were gathered there in that strange fashion, and men who were not at all superstitious asserted it as their belief that the poor brute was in full sympathy with us in almost trembling beneath her feet. At the battle of Cedar Mountain. This was Sally's first battle, and the men of the Eleventh fully expected she would go to the rear with the drummers. But no she had lain too many times at the feet of the color-bearer, and became too familiar with the symbol of the nation's power to thus desert it in its hour of peril, and so she kept close to the regiment, though the air was full of missiles and the ground almost trembled beneath her feet. At Rappahannock Station, Thoroughfare Gap, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain and Antietam she demonstrated the fact that dogs can be brave and true. In this latter bloody battle she was wounded, but she imitated many of her betters by remaining on the field until the fight was over. It was soon enough then to have her wound attended to, and her sympathy for her brave protectors, who were lying about torn and bleeding, was manifested in many ways peculiar to the canine. Men related afterward how Sally "came and licked their wounds," thus emulating the example of certain other members of the tribe famous in scripture.

At Fredericksburg Sally's record was bad. She was probably wiser than some of the generals, foreseen that the whole thing was to be an ignominious failure, and became demoralized. Certain it is that she ran away in the face of the enemy. But no one in the brigade ever blamed her for it. Indeed, it is an open question whether it would not have been better for the Union cause if the whole army had followed her example.

At Gettysburg Sally stoned for her disgraceful behavior at Fredericksburg. We fought with the Fifth Corps on July 1st, south of the town. We were forced to fall back in the face of superior numbers, and in consequence of Howard's troops not being able to keep the enemy away from our right flank and rear; but Sally refused to retreat. She held her ground, and was not seen again until July 4th, when, it is supposed her patriotic instincts led her into "God's country" in order that she might celebrate the glorious Fourth. And, by the way, wasn't that Fourth of July, 1863, a glorious Fourth, indeed? Gettysburg and Vicksburg in June and, before rejoicing had ceased, Port Hudson! But the manner of Sally's return from the battle field of the first day at Gettysburg is worth nothing, and it reflects credit upon a brave officer of the Twelfth Massachusetts then a Captain, later a Lieutenant-Colonel. Sally came through the rebel army and was seen between the picket lines. The captain, though exposed to great danger in doing so, went out and escorted her in, and was rewarded with the cheers of the whole brigade. Sally's unpleasant experience while with the enemy taught her a useful lesson, and she ever after clung close to the Eleventh.

There is an old and probably true saying that "every dog has his day," and Sally's day came on the 6th day February, 1865. In the battle of Hatchet's Run the faithful creature, after being the constant companion of the men of the Eleventh for nearly four years, sharing with them all their hardships and sufferings, going with them into their great and bloody battles, was killed by a bullet from the enemy. And the brave boys dug her a little grave and buried her where she fell under the enemy's fire. The night before her death she howled a good deal as if she had a premonition of what was coming. She slept rather late, among the soldiers of Company D, of the Eleventh and her most immediate neighbors were a sergeant and three men. In the same fight in which she met her death the sergeant and one of the men were killed and the other two severely wounded, and thus another proof is given to support the oft-repeated saying that there is somehow and somewhere a strange channel leading up through the animal kingdom to man, through which shadows of coming events are cast before.
